

My Hometown

Anthony A Mascolo, Esq.

Staten Island is my hometown. And I am damn proud of its heritage. Especially its legal community. This is a legal community that has always worked very closely with the people of Staten Island. No phony attitudes. Just good, sound jurisprudence.

The legal community of Staten Island is client oriented.

It is geared towards helping the middle class and small business community. It is a hard work community. It is the practice of law that is done with handshakes and where your word is your bond. I was very proud when I practiced to be a part of this community.

Staten Island is a unique part of New York City. Its legal system is part of that uniqueness. I know this community and its legal system

We know each other. We know our clients personally more often than not. We respect each persons abilities.

We would rather work together for a good solution. But fearless if a solution cannot be worked out.

Understanding the Staten Island legal community and its clients is an essential tool in the mediation process. It is a tool that I will bring to our mediations. I believe it will help resolve cases in a way that only a person with that knowledge can accomplish.

Mediation is a fair and just approach to resolution of your case. Quicker, and less costly than the traditional legal system
